Russian lenders lack access to long-term financing, said Central Bank First Deputy Chairman Gennady Melikyan.

"We don't have the infrastructure that is used abroad to provide banks with long-term money," Melikyan said Friday at a conference in St. Petersburg. "The period when we had excess liquidity appears to be nearing the end."

The government and the economy at large are responsible for providing long-term funds to lenders, not the Central Bank, he said.
