

Putin Signs Oil Tax Regime

By The Moscow Times

August 25, 2011

The  Moscow Times

Prime Minister Vladimir Putin signed an order putting the country's new oil product export duty regime into effect from Oct. 1, a government source said Thursday.

The order, which unifies oil product duty at 66 percent of the fee paid on crude oil exports, is part of the so-called "60-66" reform of Russia's oil duty regime, which is designed to spur upstream production and upgrades to refineries.

The order makes an exception for gasoline, which will remain subject to a duty of 90 percent of the crude fee, an ad-hoc measure imposed earlier this year to make gasoline exports unprofitable, while the country experienced a deficit of fuel at pumps nationwide.

"The order only stipulates changes in oil product taxation. The crude oil duty issue will be decided separately," the source said, adding that a separate order, which sets the coefficient for calculating crude duty at 60, is being drafted.

(Reuters)

Original url: <https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2011/08/25/putin-signs-oil-tax-regime-a9154>