

Russia Ranks 2nd for Billionaires

By Irina Filatova

March 10, 2012

The  Moscow Times

Russia ranked second by the number of the world's wealthiest people this year — leaving China just a notch behind — with tycoon Alisher Usmanov becoming the country's richest businessman for the first time after he placed his bets on the burgeoning high-tech industry.

A total of 96 of the world's 1,226 billionaires come from Russia, putting it in second place — up from third place last year — after the United States, which boasts 425 people whose fortune exceeds $1 billion, according to the annual billionaire ranking published by Forbes magazine Wednesday.

China has 95 billionaires this year, Forbes said.

Russia has a historic reason to be among the world's leaders by the number of billionaires because control over the biggest companies was consolidated in the hands of a few businessmen during the privatizations in the 1990s, said Vyacheslav Smolyaninov, a strategist at UralSib Capital.

“It’s a typical Russian phenomenon,” he said by telephone.

The second reason, Smolyaninov said, is Russia’s reliance on raw materials. The country’s economy has yet to pick up, “but the downturn is over for sure and careful optimism exists,” he said.

Indeed, most Russians on the Forbes list own assets in the metals and mining or oil and gas industries.

But while falling metals prices slashed the fortunes of the owners of metal companies, Usmanov, who controls the country’s biggest iron-ore producer Metalloinvest, saw his wealth grow to $18.1 billion from $17.7 billion in 2011.

“Usmanov took the lead on the list of the wealthiest Russians, and it was not metallurgical assets — on which his fortune had been based previously — that helped him to achieve it, but virtual ones,” Forbes’ Russian edition said.

Usmanov started investing in telecommunications assets a few years ago and owns stakes in Facebook, Groupon, Zynga, Twitter, as well as the country’s biggest mobile operator MegaFon.

“It’s proper to call him not a metals tycoon, but a high-tech now,” Forbes’ Russian edition said.

The value of Usmanov’s 5.5 percent stake in Facebook exceeds $4 billion, according to estimates by Bloomberg. This brings his overall fortune to more than $20 billion, according to the Bloomberg Billionaires Index, a rival ranking to Forbes.

As a result, the tycoon pushed back the owner of Novolipetsk Steel, Vladimir Lisin, who has topped the Forbes ranking of Russian billionaires for the last two years.

Lisin’s fortune dropped from $24 billion in 2011 to $15.9 billion, putting him in second place in this year’s ranking.

His rival Alexei Mordashov, owner of steel giant Severstal, was ranked third with an estimated fortune of $15.3 billion.

Mordashov was ranked second last year with $18.5 billion.

Among other tycoons on the Forbes list were Interros head Vladimir Potanin, LUKoil chief executive Vagit Alekperov and head of Onexim Group and recent presidential candidate Mikhail Prokhorov.

Russia's top 10 wealthiest people

World rank	Name	Net worth, $ bln	Assets
28	Alisher Usmanov	18.1	steel, telecom, investments
41	Vladimir Lisin	15.9	steel, transport
45	Alexei Mordashov	15.3	steel, investments
46	Vladimir Potanin	14.5	metals
56	Vagit Alekperov	13.5	LUKoil

57	Mikhail Fridman	13.4	oil, banking, telecom
58	Mikhail Prokhorov	13.2	investments
64	Viktor Vekselberg	12.4	oil, metals
68	Roman Abramovich	12.1	steel, investments
72	Leonid Mikhelson	11.9	gas, chemicals

Source: Forbes

Original url: <https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2012/03/10/russia-ranks-2nd-for-billionaires-a13147>