

Ukraine Shrugs Off Racism Concerns as Football Championship Starts

June 08, 2012

KIEV — Co-hosts Ukraine and Poland struggled to dispel racism concerns Friday right up to the kickoff of the Euro 2012 football finals, the biggest event in Eastern Europe since the collapse of communism.

Poland was hoping for a winning start against 2004 champions Greece in the opening match in front of its home fans in Warsaw before Russia took on the Czech Republic in the other Group A game in Wroclaw.

Poland and Ukraine hope the monthlong tournament will show the world how far they have come since the Berlin Wall fell in 1989 and the Soviet Union collapsed two years later. Ukraine wants the finals to help it integrate with the West.

But both countries are embroiled in a dispute over racism, and Ukraine faces a boycott over its treatment of opposition leader Yulia Tymoshenko, who was jailed in a case that the West says is politically motivated.

A spokeswoman for the Dutch team said players had heard racist chants from the crowd this week during a training session.

"Some players did hear some monkey noises. That is why they moved to the other side of the pitch," the spokeswoman said, although coach Bert van Marwijk, Dutch officials and many journalists at the training session heard no racist abuse.

Ukraine has also tried to dismiss such concerns, which were fueled by a BBC documentary that showed racist violence in a Ukrainian football stadium.

"There is no racism in Ukraine," the government press office quoted Prime Minister Mykola Azarov as saying. "Ukraine is an extremely tolerant and democratic country."
