

Assange Says Snowden Info Will Keep Getting Published

By The Moscow Times

July 01, 2013

The  Moscow Times

WASHINGTON — WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange said Sunday that Edward Snowden made sure that the information he took about U.S. surveillance programs would continue to be published regardless of what happened to the former U.S. spy agency contractor.

Assange criticized the United States for revoking Snowden's passport and said it would not stop the classified information taken by the 30-year-old fugitive from getting out.

"Look, there is no stopping the publishing process at this stage," Assange said in an interview with ABC's "This Week" television show. "Great care has been taken to make sure that Mr. Snowden can't be pressured by any state to stop the publication process."

He did not directly respond when asked if WikiLeaks was in possession of the files.

Last week, Glenn Greenwald, the Guardian journalist who first published the classified information released by Snowden, said Snowden had made encrypted copies of his files and distributed them in case anything happened to him.

Greenwald told The Daily Beast that the people in possession of those files "cannot access them yet because they are highly encrypted and they do not have the passwords." But Greenwald said "if anything happens at all to Edward Snowden, he told me he has arranged for them to get access to the full archives."

The U.S. government has charged Snowden under the 1917 Espionage Act with theft and passing classified communications to an "unauthorized person."

Snowden is currently stuck in legal limbo in a transit area of Moscow's Sheremetyevo Airport. Assange has said that Snowden, who has sought legal advice from WikiLeaks, has requested asylum in Ecuador.

Assange sought asylum from Ecuador last year and is living in Ecuador's London embassy to avoid being extradited to Sweden, which wants to question him about allegations of sexual assault and rape.

Assange said the United States had "marooned" Snowden in Russia by revoking his passport.

"Is that really a great outcome by the State Department?" Assange asked, saying that Washington had put Snowden through a "meat grinder" although "Mr. Snowden has not been convicted of anything."

In a separate interview, President Barack Obama's national security adviser, Tom Donilon, said that since Snowden was not traveling on valid papers, he should be returned to the United States "because he's wanted here for a crime."

Donilon said Washington had been in discussions with the Russian government through law enforcement channels on a regular basis about Snowden.

"And I have to agree with President [Vladimir] Putin, which — when he said the other day that it would be better for Mr. Snowden to decide where — when he's leaving ... sooner rather than later," Donilon said on CNN's "Fareed Zakaria GPS." "We agree with that — that the sooner that this can be resolved, the better."

Related articles:

- Germany's Greens Say Snowden Should Get Safe Haven in Europe
- U.S. 'Bugged EU Offices'
- Federation Council Invites Snowden to Investigate Spying Claims

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2013/07/01/assange-says-snowden-info-will-keep-getting-published-a25419>