

Cosmonaut Wins Wages Case vs Space Agency

By The Moscow Times

October 06, 2013

The  Moscow Times

A Moscow regional court on Friday upheld a lawsuit filed by a prominent cosmonaut against the Russian space training center complaining about wages.

Colonel Sergei Volkov, who has logged 199 days in space, was contesting a recent government decision to strip retired military men, like himself, of extra pay for their space experience.

The court in the Moscow region, where the Russian cosmonauts' training ground is located, upheld Volkov's lawsuit, ordering the Gagarin Cosmonaut Training Center to pay cosmonauts with military backgrounds for the spaceflights that they have completed. It also awarded him 1.4 million rubles ($43,500) in back wages.

Extra pay for space experience for veteran cosmonauts like Volkov could be equal to their monthly salary.

The 40-year-old Volkov, who started out as a military pilot and went on long-term missions at the International Space Station in 2008 and 2011, serves as the head of the cosmonauts at the training center that he sued.

Cosmonaut Sergei Zaletin told the RIA Novosti news agency that Volkov was "representing all military cosmonauts."

Instances of Russian officials suing their agencies are extremely rare.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2013/10/06/cosmonaut-wins-wages-case-vs-space-agency-a28323>