Police are conducting checks into a Moscow hair salon for allegedly employing naked women to give hair cuts and perform sexual services on clients, the Moskva news agency reported.

A video taken with a secret camera and published by some media outlets earlier this week shows a female hairdresser removing her clothes before proceeding to trim a clients' hair, the report said Tuesday.

Investigators are currently analyzing the footage and will decide whether or not to pursue a criminal investigation based on their conclusions, a police spokesperson told the Moskva news agency.

The investigation was prompted after police received a complaint from representatives of an autism therapy center located in the same building as the alleged "naked hair salon," the report said.
