

FSB Replaces Doors Russian Artist Pavlensky Set on Fire

December 17, 2015

The front doors of the Russian Federal Security Service (FSB) headquarters, which were set on fire by political performance artist Pyotr Pavlensky last month, have been replaced, images shared on social media on Thursday showed.

В минуты проливания елейной телеереси, двери Большого дома на Лубянке засияли свежестью и чистотой. Сотрудники службы безопасности, чтобы не пропустить Павленского в следующий раз, решили от дверей просто никогда не отходить. Приняли, значит, меры.

Фото опубликовано Artem Dertev (@dertev_live) Дек 17 2015 в 3:42 PST

On Nov. 9, at about 1 a.m. Pavlensky poured petrol over the wooden doors of the FSB's main office at Moscow's Lubyanka Square, and set them on fire in a performance titled “Threat. The Burning Doors of Lubyanka” to protest against repressive government policies.

Pavlensky was arrested and charged with vandalism. Earlier in December, the court prolonged his detention until Jan.7.

If found guilty, the artist faces up to three years in prison.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2015/12/17/fsb-replaces-doors-russian-artist-pavlensky-set-on-fire-a51274>