

Muchnik's Picks: Scooter, Leningrad, Ivan Dorn and More Music on the Weekend in Moscow

By Andrei Muchnik

March 23, 2016

Scooter

The first month of spring is nearing its end, but outside it still feels like February. If this is your first winter in the Russian capital, follow this simple recipe: warm yourself up with a drink and go to a concert! Pick your own poison and one of the gigs from our top picks.

Vkontakte

NV

The most unusual concert this weekend is NV's presentation of her debut album "Binasu." The concert will take place on Friday at the Mars Gallery, in its audio visual laboratory. Binasu, which means Venus in Japanese, was released on the Orange Milk U.S. record label. NV is the stage name of Katya Shilonosova, who also doubles as the front woman for the popular post-punk band Glintshake. NV plays electronic music, but this time there will be a live band.

Mars Gallery. 5 Pushkaryov Pereulok. Metro Trubnaya, Tsvetnoy Bulvar. Tickets 500 rubles ($7). Fri. at 10 p.m.

Alina Orlova is back in Moscow with another concert on Friday. This indie-pop star from Vilnius is very popular with Muscovites. Last year she released her latest album "88" where, as usual, she sings in English, Russian and Lithuanian — but to much livelier tunes than before.

16 Tons. 6/1 Ulitsa Presnensky Val. Metro 1905 Goda. Tickets from 1,500 rubles ($22). Fri. at 8 p.m.

lafleur / Wikicommons

Leningrad

If you didn't make it to one of their two sold-out December performances, this Friday is your chance to see the super stars of Russian pop-rock Leningrad in a live performance. Leningrad started this year by releasing one of their most popular songs to date — "Ekspomat" (Art Work) with the famous line describing a girl's perfect outfit for a date — "na labutenakh i v ohuitelnikh shtanakh" ("wearing Louboutin shoes and fing awesome pants"). There will be crowds singing along to this and older hits.

Stadium Live. 7 Ulitsa Baltiiskaya. Metro Sokol. Tickets from 2,500 rubles ($37). Fri. at 8 p.m.

Scooter, perennial ravers from Germany, will pay Moscow a visit on Saturday. This band, which practically invented the genre of happy hardcore, needs no introduction. Their hit song "How Much is the Fish" is immensely popular in Russia and is often referred to by its Russian translation "Pochem Ryba." Get your tickets in advance!

Yotaspase. 11 Ulitsa Ordzhonikidze. Metro Leninsky Prospekt. Tickets from 3,000 rubles ($44). Sat. at 8 p.m.

Ivan Dorn, pop star from neighboring Ukraine, whose performance at Afisha Picnic festival last summer was politically charged, is coming for a solo performance on Saturday. His last album was released in 2014, but this will be his first proper concert in Moscow in three years. Expect a packed venue and crowds of female fans.

Stadium Live. 7 Ulitsa Baltiiskaya. Metro Sokol. Tickets from 2,500 rubles ($37) Sat. at 8 p.m.

Contact the author at artsreporter@imedia.ru

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2016/03/23/muchniks-picks-scooter-leningrad-ivan-dorn-and-more-music-on-the-weekend-in-moscow-a48253>