

'What the Hell Is Going On?' Russia Reacts to Shock Detention of Economy Minister

By The Moscow Times

November 15, 2016

AP/Alexander Zemlianichenko

Reports of the sudden arrest of longstanding Economic Development Minister Alexei Ulyukayev in the early hours of Tuesday have come as a shock to Kremlin insiders and pundits.

Ulyukayev was detained late on Monday for allegedly accepting a $2-million bribe to approve a bid by the state-controlled oil giant Rosneft to acquire government shares in Bashneft, Russia's Investigative Committee said Tuesday.

Kremlin officials quickly jumped on the news as evidence of Russia's fair law enforcement system, while independent commentators scratched their heads over what had caused the prominent politician to fall foul of the Kremlin.

Here's a compilation of reactions from Kremlin officials, analysts and commentators that will be updated throughout the day.

Read our full article here: Economic Development Minister Alexei Ulyukayev charged with corruption.

Anatoly Chubais, head of state technology firm Rosnano: "For people like us, who have known Alexei Ulyukayev for more than 30 years, this has all come as an absolute shock. But even if we try and do away with all emotion, all sympathy, all politics, we still must remember that there are two sides to every story. One side of that story says that Ulyukayev threatened Rosneft and took a bribe. The other side of that story, we still haven't heard."

(Ekho Moskvyy)

Grigory Yavlinsky, leader of liberal opposition party Yabloko: "Ulyukayev is one official who is absolutely loyal to the President. As head of the Economic Development Ministry, he has supported war against Ukraine and annexation of Crimea, the war in Syria, and all manner of repressive laws. Putin's logic in arresting the loyal and high-ranking Ulyukayev was to demonstrate his power over all government officials. The overnight arrest of a minister lets everyone know that anything can happen at any time."

(Ekho Moskvyy)

Russian Communist Party Leader, Gennady Zyuganov: "This has long been expected. Our economic and financial policy is destructive, it's robbing people down to the bone. The budget which Ulyukayev prepared is generally useless. Apparently, he decided to profit from the state coffers, which he squandered left and right. It's shameful. If this had happened in China, he would be executed."

(LifeNews)

Dmitry Peskov, Kremlin spokesman:

"The president, of course, has been aware since the beginning of the operation, that is, he received all the information."

"These are very serious charges, that demand very serious proof. In any case, only the court can decide."

(Interfax)

Vyacheslav Volodin, State Duma Speaker, and Putin's former deputy chief of staff:

Alexei Pushkov, senator and former head of the Duma's committee on international affairs:

“The experience of several governors, and now it seems the minister, shows that [taking] bribes in Russia is becoming ever more dangerous. Russian roulette.”

(Twitter)

Natalya Poklonskaya, Duma deputy:

“This shows the position of our government: in Russia there are no untouchables. All secrets are uncovered. Officials who commit corruption-related crimes, even extorting bribes, should understand perfectly that punishment is inevitable.”

(LifeNews)

Nikolai Kovalyov, former head of FSB: “I'm not surprised, I was expecting something like this after reading [Ulyukayev's] poems, calling upon his son to flee Russia: “Leave, my son, leave this place.”

(Gazeta.ru)

Unidentified source involved in Ulyukayev's detention cited by Lifenews.ru tabloid: “When they took him, he initially didn't understand what was going on. Initially he thought it was some kind of mistake. He started phoning several highly placed colleagues. He asked everyone: 'what the hell is going on.' No one could answer, some just hung up on him.”

(LifeNews)

Abbas Gallyamov, analyst speaking to The Moscow Times:

“According to my information, after acquiring [the government's stake in] Bashneft, Sechin's team found evidence of serious embezzlement while the stakes were in government hands. I think this was reported to Putin, who then gave the green light to uncover this material. So possibly Ulyukayev is not the last person to be charged in this case.”

Gleb Pavlovsky, analyst:

“Everyone is considering the rumors, not the facts. The fact is that the Russian president for six months was involved in detective work against the Russian government.”

“When the Kremlin decides to get involved in politics, it calls the police.”

(Facebook)

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2016/11/15/reactions-to-detention-of-russias-economy-minister-wh-at-the-hell-is-going-on-a56143>