

'Historians couldn't believe such documents still exist'

Russian man tracks down the secret police who executed his great-grandfather 80 years ago

By Kevin Rothrock

November 21, 2016

The site in Tomsk where Stepan Karagodin was executed by an NKVD firing squad.
@StepanKARAGODIN / Twitter

A 34-year-old Tomsk resident says he's tracked down the names of the men who helped kill his great-grandfather — a peasant who was executed in 1938 on charges of spying for the Japanese. According to a new report by Radio Liberty, Denis Karagodin managed to convince initially reluctant security-services archivists to show him documents that helped him reconstruct the chain of events that led to his relative's execution almost 80 years ago.

Karagodin says he's found the names of the people involved at every stage of his great-grandfather's death, from the NKVD leadership in Moscow to the officers in Tomsk charged with enforcing the sentence, including even locals drivers and typists, and the actual gunmen who carried out the execution.

The key document in the investigation was an execution order by the Tomsk NKVD office against 36 different people, including Karagodin's great-grandfather. "The historians and specialists I was able to reach couldn't believe that I'd managed to get this document," he told Radio Liberty. "Some were simply in shock that such documents still exist and that you can actually get them. It's possible that I might be the first person in Russia's history to be given such documents."

Embed:

Ð¸Ð³/4Ð¹/4Ð³/4Ð³Ð,Ñ¸Ðµ Ñ¸Ð°Ñ¸Ñ¸Ð,Ñ¸Ñ¸Ð³/4Ð²Ð°Ñ¸Ñ¸
Ð¿/4Ð´Ð¿,Ñ¸Ð, Ñ¸Ð³/4Ñ¸Ñ¸Ñ¸Ð¹/2Ð,Ð°Ð³/4Ð² Ð¸Ð¸Ð¸Ð¸ Ð¹/2Ð°
Ð²Ñ¸Ð¿Ð,Ñ¸Ð°Ðµ Ð,Ð. Ñ¸Ð°Ñ¸Ñ¸Ñ¸Ñ¸Ñ¸ÐµÐ»Ñ¸Ð¹/2Ð³/4Ð³Ð³/4 Ð°Ð°Ñ¸Ð°:
<https://t.co/elvUsnYGWe pic.twitter.com/D8Ga9yxkNt>

— Ð¿Ñ¸ÐµÐ¿Ð°Ð¹/2 Ð¸Ð¸Ð¸ Ð¸Ð¸Ð¸Ð¸Ð¸Ð¸Ð¸Ð¸Ð¸ (@StepanKARAGODIN) July 9, 2016

Translation: "Help me decipher the NKVD staff signatures on the record of the firing-squad execution."

Reconciliation, Not Repentance?

Late on Nov. 20, Karagodin says he got a letter from the granddaughter of one of the men who executed his great-grandfather, asking forgiveness. She apparently learned about who her grandfather was, thanks to Karagodin's research, which he shares on his blog and on several social-media accounts.

"I haven't slept for several days," the letter said. "I've read over all the documents on your website. [...] I know I'm not to blame for what happened, but the feelings I'm having are beyond words."

Karagodin says he wrote back to the woman, thanking her for her honesty, and offering a "hand of reconciliation."

Embed:

Ð¸Ð³/4Ð´³/4Ð±Ñ¸Ð°Ð»Ñ¸Ñ¸Ð¹/4Ð°Ð°Ñ¸Ñ¸Ð,Ð¹/4Ð°Ð»Ñ¸Ñ¸Ð¹/2Ð³/4
Ð±Ð»Ð»Ð,Ð°Ð°Ð³/4 Ð° Ñ¸Ð±Ð,Ð¹Ñ¸Ð°Ð¹/4 (Ð² Ð¿Ñ¸Ñ¸Ñ¸Ð¹/4Ð³/4Ð¹/4
Ñ¸Ð¹/4Ñ¸Ñ¸Ð»Ð»Ðµ) â¸Ð¹/4Ð³/4Ð³Ð,Ð»Ð°Ð° Ð¿Ñ¸Ð°Ð»Ñ¸Ñ¸Ð¹/2Ð° Ð, Ð´Ñ¸.
Ñ¸Ð±Ð,Ð¹Ñ¸Ñ¸ â¸Ð¸Ð¸ Ð¸Ñ¸Ð°Ñ¸Ñ¸Ð¹/2Ð°Ñ¸ Ð¿Ð»Ð»Ð³/4Ñ¸Ð°Ð´Ñ¸, Ð¸Ð³/4Ñ¸Ð°Ð²Ð°. pic.twitter.com/ldc9oV52tr

— Ді Ні́муді́Д°Д½ ДДД ДДДДДДДДДД (@StepanKARAGODIN) May 25, 2013

Translation: “We got as close as we could to the killers (literally): Stalin's grave and the resting place of other killers, Red Square, Moscow.

According to the website TJournal, Karagodin’s story has attracted significant attention on Facebook, where many Russians have welcomed the theme of reconciliation between “victims” and “executioners,” arguing that “repentance” is less practical, given the moral chaos that prevailed in the Soviet Union in the 1930s and 40s.

Shot on Jan. 21, 1938

Karagodin’s great-grandfather, Stepan, was arrested on Dec. 1, 1937, by members of the Tomsk NKVD — the predecessor to the KGB. He was charged with conducting espionage for the Empire of Japan, and sentenced to death by firing squad. The verdict was carried out on Jan. 21, 1938, and Stepan Karagodin’s relatives were told merely that he’d died while in police custody.

Embed:

ДДД¾ÑД»Д¾Д²Д°Д½ Д¿Д¾Д’ ÑÑÑД°Д¼ â
ÑÑÑÑД¾Д,ÑДµД»ÑÑÑÑД²Д¾
Д¼ДµД¼Д¾ÑД,Д»ÑД½Д¾Д¾Д¾
Д¿ÑД°Д²Д¾ÑД»Д°Д²Д½Д¾Д¾Д¾ ÑÑÑД°Д¼Д° Д½Д°
ДДД°ÑÑÑД°ÑД½Д¾Д¹ Д¾Д¾ÑДµ
ÑД°ÑÑÑÑÑДµД»ÑД½Д¾Д¾Д¾ ÑД²Д° Д¿Д¾Д¼Д¼ÑД°Д°.
pic.twitter.com/RHTmreMKw9

— Ді Ні́муді́Д°Д½ ДДД ДДДДДДДДДД (@StepanKARAGODIN) September 29, 2013

Translation: “A trench outside a church: construction on a memorial Russian Orthodox church at Kashtachnoi Hill, Tomsk's firing pit.”

According to Denis Karagodin’s website, his family never believed the charges against Stepan, and it spent decades trying to clear his name. Denis began his investigation in 2012, collecting information about NKVD employees at departmental and political archives. He says he also got help from the relatives of other people executed at the same time as his great-grandfather.

In June this year, Karagodin said he hopes to bring a criminal suit against the people responsible for his relative’s death, posthumously charging the individuals whose names he’s uncovered with conspiracy to commit murder.

Original url: <https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2016/11/21/historians-couldnt-believe-it-a56237>