When the coronavirus pandemic pushed millions of people into government-mandated home isolation, the internet flooded with memes about our new collective reality of wearing the same pair of sweatpants for weeks at a time, hopping on video conference calls with no makeup and generally metamorphosing into couch potatoes.

These Russian Instagrammers have had enough.

With the "stop treniki [a Russian word for tracksuits that can also refer to sweatpants] challenge," people are putting their best faces — and outfits — forward.

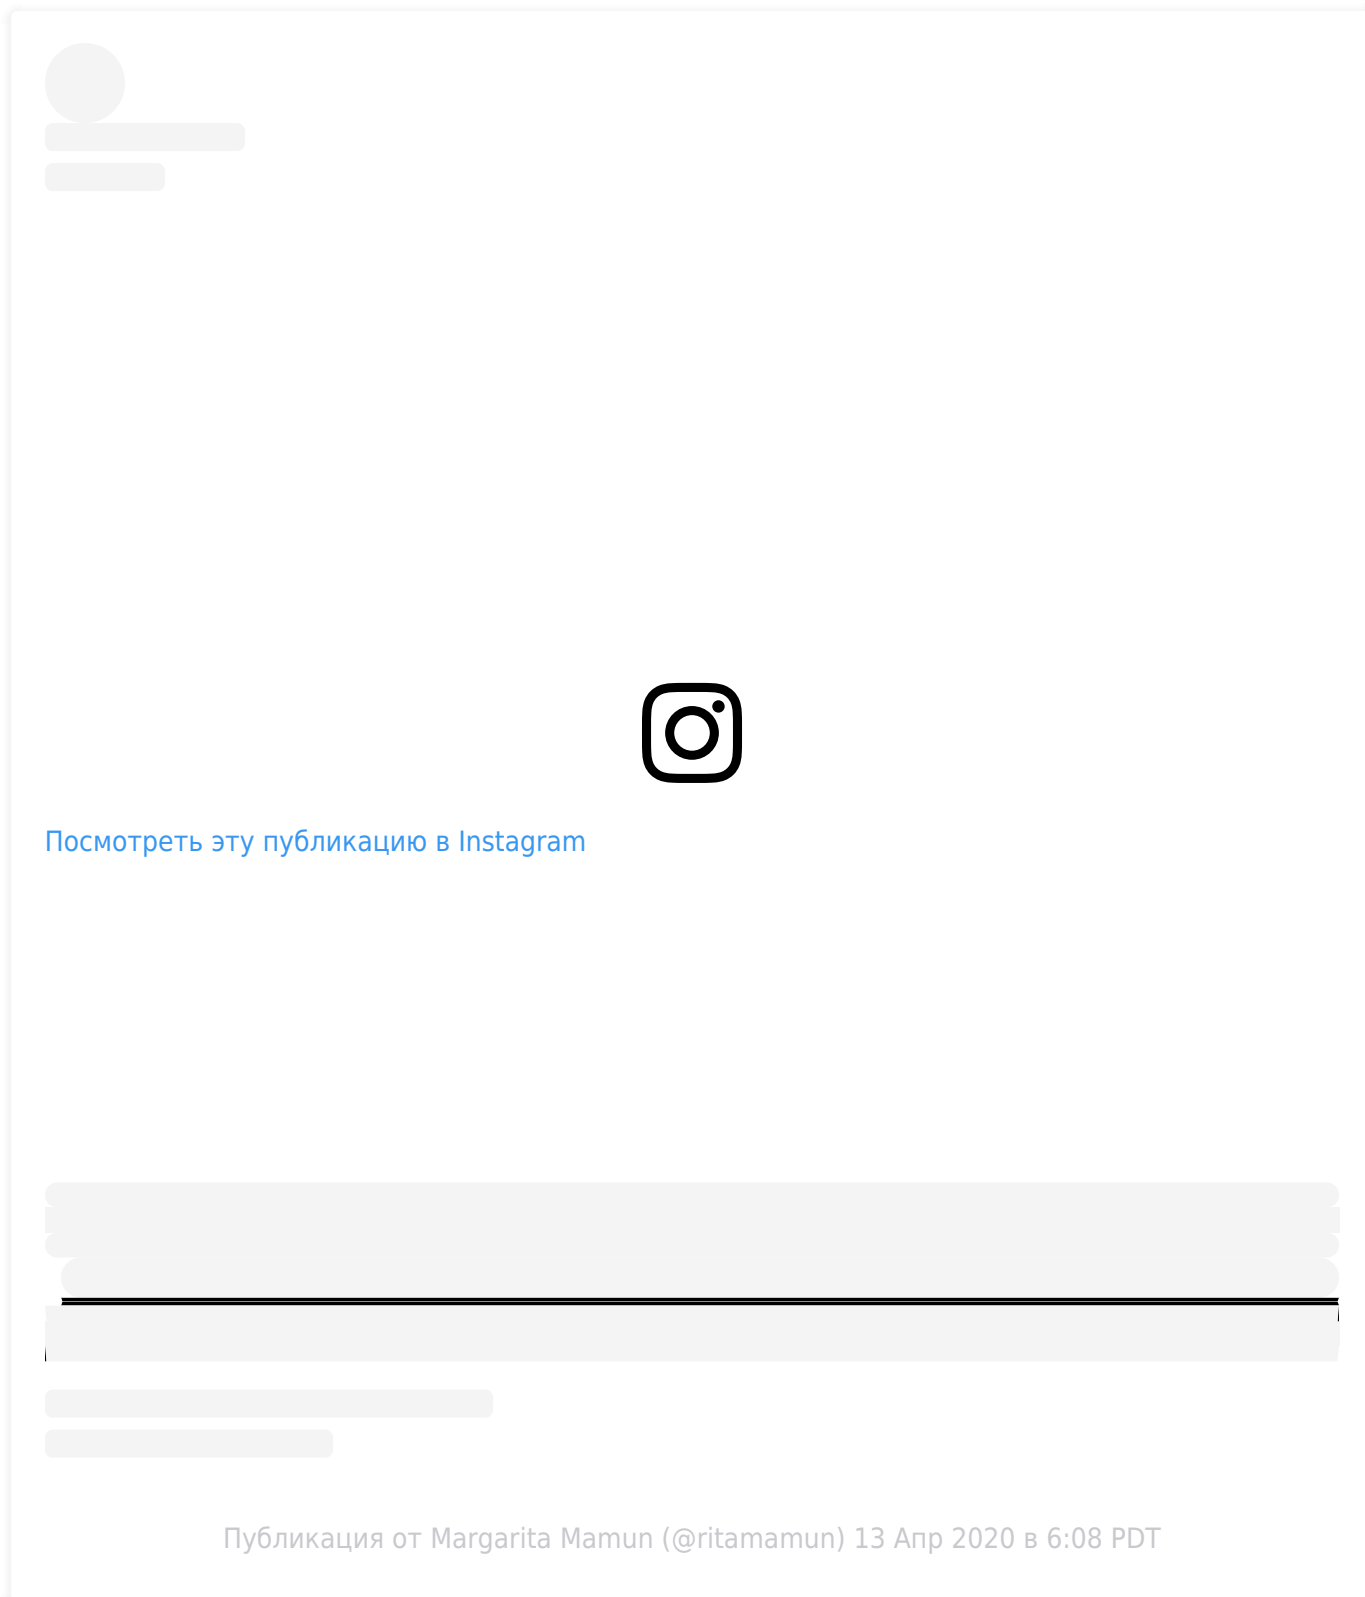

As Karl Lagerfeld himself once said: "Sweatpants are a sign of defeat. You lost control of your life so you bought some sweatpants."

Here's a look at Russia's finest quarantine couture:

This look is perfect for a night out at a glitzy gala — or for simply trying out that new pasta sauce recipe.
