

Voting Monitor Slams Russia's Election Livestream Restrictions

July 15, 2021

Only election officials, candidates and political parties will have access to live feeds from the polls in the upcoming parliamentary vote. Vedomosti / TASS

Russian officials' plans to restrict live streams from polling stations in upcoming parliamentary elections have been met with accusations of pre-emptive attempts to conceal voter fraud, including ballot stuffing.

Russia's Central Election Committee (CEC) said Wednesday that only members, candidates and political parties will have access to the live feeds when voters go to the polls from Sept. 17-19. The CEC staggered the vote for the State Duma, the lower house of Russia's parliament, over three days to limit the spread of coronavirus as Russia battles its deadliest wave of infections yet.

Related article: More Russians Barred from Elections Today Than in Soviet Union – Research

Golos, Russia's last remaining independent election monitor, slammed the CEC's restrictions on polling station livestreams as a “rapid degradation” of elections in Russia.

“The decision is nothing more than an attempt to hide from the public the events that will take place for three days and two nights at the polling stations,” Golos co-chairman Grigory Melkonyants said.

The pro-Kremlin United Russia party is seeking to retain its supermajority in the Duma in the September vote despite historically low approval ratings. Observers say a recent wave of police raids and detentions of opposition members, as well as tightened election laws that shut out allies of jailed Kremlin critic Alexei Navalny, are an attempt to clear the field of United Russia’s opponents.

“They’re clearly making sure that video observers don’t notice the falsifications that will spread online once again,” Melkonyants said in a statement on the watchdog’s website.

In 2012, then-Prime Minister Vladimir Putin ordered webcams to be installed in each of the country’s 95,000 polling stations at a cost of half a billion dollars. The ambitious program came in response to the largest public protests in years reacting to widespread allegations of ballot-box stuffing and other voting irregularities during the 2011 Duma elections.

“It was a big step forward: Video surveillance cameras managed to catch carousel voting, ballot stuffing, vote-counting falsifications and other violations,” Melkonyants said Wednesday.

He criticized this year’s reversal, which election officials explained in part by budget constraints due to the extended voting period, for introducing a “new logic of ‘don’t look, we have something to hide’.”

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2021/07/15/voting-monitor-slams-russias-election-livestream-restrictions-a74530>